ABOUT

Anthony Moutti is a painter based in Lyon, France.

He came to painting through drawing, which he has practised since childhood, and through theatre, where he learned that a gesture only counts if the whole body commits to it. He paints the same way: in oil, with his hands, on canvas and on paper. The paint is pushed, dragged and left to run until the surface holds on its own.

His work stands in the lineage of abstract expressionism and of the Japanese painters who treated the canvas as a place of action. What remains on the surface is the record of an act rather than an image of something.

He does not explain his paintings. He wants each one to be a presence in the room: something that imposes itself before it is understood.

NEW COLLECTION

10 WORKS

A painting, for him, is finished when it holds on its own: when it no longer needs the artist, the title or an explanation, and simply changes the air of the room it hangs in.
